Q: How to know when an observer is added to a collection from an NSNotification I'm using RXSwift with a NSNotification to create an observable collection of blocks. The observable collection is filled with the values of the blocks when they are created. func addObserverFor(block: (() -> Void)!, toObject: AnyObject!, onEvent: NSNotification){ (observableCollectionOfObservers.observers as! Array>)[blockIndex] = block blockIndex += 1 } Where blockIndex is an int that is incremented every time a new block is added to the observer array. I need a way to unregister the observer when the collection of observers is cleared. let notificationCenter = NSNotificationCenter.defaultCenter() notificationCenter.addObserver(forName: KCNotification.name, object: nil, queue: nil, using: addObserverFor(block: { (notification) -> Void in print(notification) }), onEvent: nil) but I'm not sure what to do to remove it. A: You can also use observe(_:) method of collection to observe notifications for changes to the list of elements. class MyClass: NSObject { var list: [(unowned AnyObject)] = [] func observeList() { guard let list = self.list else { return } // Use `observe` method to observe changes in `list`

Q: What is the most appropriate way to organize a Shared Domain with multiple subscribers? I have several domain names, such as mydomain.com and mydomain2.com. The two domains are not entirely independent from one another, but they do exist at different levels within the same directory tree. It is important that both domains have access to the same data, specifically a site with API endpoints, and a running instance of my application. I have my data stored within a SQL Server database, and I am using Windows Authentication to allow users from both domains to access the data, using the Login credentials for their respective domain. My question is, how can I organize this scenario in an efficient and secure manner so that both domains can see the database with no special considerations. A: If you are willing to setup a Windows Server 2012 as a DNS server for the domain then you can enable Kerberos for your domain and use Windows Authentication to access the database server. ## Spring * Spring Boot Swagger * Spring Rest Doc [Swagger]([Spring Rest Doc] docs * @SpringBootApplication e79caf774b
