[The effect of post-irradiation melanoma metastasis suppression by topical application of methoxsalen]. The effect of post-irradiation intracutaneous application of methoxsalen (8-MOP) on the growth of B16 melanoma cells in syngeneic C57BL/6 mice, as well as on the growth of melanoma cells from tumors induced in vivo by B16 cells, has been studied. Application of methoxsalen to the skin of C57BL/6 mice 7 days after local sublethal irradiation (2 Gy) causes complete regression of irradiation-induced melanoma tumors. Methoxsalen produces no effect when administered 10 days after irradiation (10 Gy) or when injected 4 h before or after irradiation. Methoxsalen-induced melanoma tumor regression is paralleled by a marked inhibition of distant metastasis formation. The metastatic efficiency of melanoma cells is decreased after irradiation by 2.5-5 fold depending on the magnitude of administered dose. Methoxsalen administration 7 days after irradiation (2 Gy) reduces the metastatic frequency by 3.3-8 fold. The results of this study indicate that systemic therapy with methoxsalen can be used for a therapeutic purpose in patients with metastasized melanoma after local irradiation. The present invention is directed generally to a method and apparatus for dicing
