There were discussed the results of treatment of 93 patients with blunt renal trauma. In 51 patients an intraperitoneal injury was found, in 22--ureteral lesion (by renal ultrasound) and in 20--extraction of hematoma from the renal pelvis. The renal dislocation and perirenal hematoma account for 11.5%. According to classification of Conn and Katz, urological complication was observed in 24 (26.1%) patients. Urethral lesion was found more frequently in patients with intraperitoneal trauma, and it was observed more often in cases of forced micturition in the presence of high pressure and prolonged retention of urine. The immediate surgical procedures were performed in 58 (62.4%) patients. Among them, the most frequent surgical procedure was radical nephrectomy in 41.8%, and the most used method of extracorporeal diversion was the ureteric stent, then loop nephrostomy was performed. Long-term follow-up examinations in 25 patients have demonstrated that the incidence of the urological complications after blunt renal trauma is 26.9%.52 SHARES Facebook Twitter Linkedin Reddit Razer has announced its new VR-ready gaming headset, the Blade Touch:

included in your Innova 3130 and 3130c case.Q: Should jquery.serializeArray be used in all cases? Is there a reason that everyone that writes a jquery plugin for serializing forms like this: jQuery(function($){ $('form').serializeArray(); }); Actually uses.serializeArray() on all forms they create? I ask because reading the documentation on.serialize(), serializeArray() creates a hidden input field for each textbox in the form, with the variable name from the attribute name. A:

$('form').serialize();

Since that method is part of jQuery and always available, you can use that instead of writing your own function. Of course, any existing functionality is not maintained if it is not used (and it is not for the purposes mentioned in the question). A: The reason that is done is because when you do: $('form').serializeArray(); All the inputs of the form are automatically saved in an array of form field objects. If you do: $('form').serialize(); Then jQuery will automatically run the default serialize function and will fill in the hidden input as a fallback if one does not exist. This is useful for preventing to many new fields being added to your form. Q: Write to two files in one line of code in python I want to write the output of a command in two files. What I would like to do is something like this:
